The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has began soliciting public comment about whether changes are needed for federal regulations requiring irradiated food to be labeled as such.

Currently, the FDA requires that retail packages or displays of irradiated food include both the logo for irradiation and a statement like "treated by irradiation," and that such notices be prominently displayed. The FDA is asking whether irradiation labeling should be less conspicuously displayed, such as being included as part of a list of ingredients.

(Pro-irradiation groups have argued against the necessity of prominent labeling, or the necessity of labeling, since the process has been deemed safe. They see requiring overt labeling as dissuading consumer acceptance of irradiated foods.)

However, others argue prominent labeling is needed in order to give shoppers a choice between products.

Comments: We deserve to clearly see what products have been treated with irradiation. For those who do not want to eat irradiated food the lab notice should be noticeable enough so we do not have to bring a magnifying glass or spend minutes looking for the warning. It is our right as consumers to know everything that is done to our food before we bring it home.
